Poem
Sundown
by Peter Neil Carroll
Sundown

Teaching adult teachers in the Mississippi Delta, I ask Wilmer, the oldest black man in the room, who was the oldest black man he ever knew and what, if anything did that old man teach him?
Wilmer rubs his chin, speaks softly, without hesitation, telling the story he'd heard--- that night in September 1919 when a posse shot into a meeting of sharecroppers planning to start a fair-price store, and the farmers, those not killed on the spot, fled into the woods, and for a week the hounds hunted them, treed the luckless survivors, whose bodies were tossed by the dozens onto slow moving trains trundling north and buried there by persons unknown who also could never go home---

When he stops, the teachers sit stock-still, numbed by the horror, though not surprised how word-of-mouth keeps their history alive.
Now with parched voices they tell their own stories---shotguns stacked at the doors, fear of sundown, fear of having business in town, fear even of what could happen tonight.
